About CFR
The Council on Foreign Relations (CFR) is an independent, nonpartisan membership organization, think tank, and publisher dedicated to being a resource for its members, government officials, business executives, journalists, educators and students, civic and religious leaders, and other interested citizens in order to help them better understand the world and the foreign policy choices facing the United States and other countries.

Founded in 1921, the Council on Foreign Relations takes no institutional positions on matters of policy. CFR carries out its mission by

- maintaining a diverse membership, with special programs to promote interest and develop expertise in the next generation of foreign policy leaders;
- convening meetings at its headquarters in New York and in Washington, DC, and other cities where senior government officials, members of Congress, global leaders, and prominent thinkers come together with CFR members to discuss and debate major international issues;
- supporting a Studies Program that fosters independent research, enabling CFR scholars to produce articles, reports, and books and hold roundtables that analyze foreign policy issues and make concrete policy recommendations;
- publishing Foreign Affairs, the preeminent journal on international affairs and U.S. foreign policy;
- sponsoring Independent Task Forces that produce reports with both findings and policy prescriptions on the most important foreign policy topics; and
- providing up-to-date information and analysis about world events and U.S. foreign policy on its websites, CFR.org and ForeignAffairs.com.

CFR Members

The Council on Foreign Relations is first and foremost a membership organization. With nearly 5,000 members, the institution’s ranks include prominent government officials, scholars, business leaders, journalists, attorneys, educators, religious leaders, and nonprofit professionals. The membership is divided almost equally among Americans living in New York, Washington, DC, and across the country and abroad, and it represents a diverse group unmatched in accomplishment in the field of international affairs.

Included among CFR members are more than six hundred term members. The Stephen M. Kellen Term Member program—established to cultivate the next generation of foreign policy leaders—encourages promising young professionals from diverse backgrounds to engage in a sustained conversation on international affairs and the U.S. role in the world. Each year, a new class of term members between the ages of thirty and thirty-six is elected to a five-year term.

For more information on membership, please visit www.cfr.org/about/membership.
Founded in 1953 with twenty-five corporate members, the Corporate Program has since expanded to include nearly 170 companies from various sectors and regions of the world. The program provides executives with an opportunity to contribute to the dialogue on global issues via a robust meetings lineup including the CEO Speaker Series. Member companies enjoy briefings by in-house experts, a members-only website with CFR resources tailored for the private sector, and an annual corporate conference on topics such as geopolitical risk, regulation and taxation, competitiveness, and emerging markets. CFR’s convening power brings together business with decision-makers from government, media, nongovernmental organizations (NGOs), and academia, and connects business leaders with the foreign policy debate.

Influential Forum

Each year the Council on Foreign Relations organizes nearly one thousand events for members, including meetings with high-level U.S. and foreign government officials, History Maker interviews, in-depth symposia, expert panels, book clubs, and film screenings. The Meetings Program provides CFR members with in-person access to sought-after world leaders and policymakers. Recent speakers have included Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi, former Secretary of State and National Security Advisor Henry Kissinger, and Morgan Stanley Chairman and CEO James P. Gorman.

The Washington Program engages policymakers on critical debates playing out in the nation’s capital. The Congress and U.S. Foreign Policy program brings CFR experts and ideas to Capitol Hill, offering members of Congress and their staff nonpartisan analysis of the issues that matter most to them and their constituents. CFR also reaches out to decision-makers in the executive branch and the diplomatic community, offering an intellectually diverse range of perspectives on complex policy questions.
For National members—those residing outside of New York and Washington, DC—CFR organizes foreign policy roundtables and seminars in eleven cities at which CFR fellows discuss their research and writing; local roundtables that build on the expertise of CFR fellows, members, and community leaders; a national book club series; teleconferences and livestreams of New York and Washington meetings; an interactive conference call series on current events; and an annual National Conference at the institution’s New York headquarters.

Although most sessions are exclusively for members, CFR and Foreign Affairs have increasingly opened meetings to the media and have held public events as a way to inform a broader audience. Most on-the-record meetings are livestreamed to the public on CFR.org and the transcripts, audio, and video are posted to the site.

INDEPENDENT TASK FORCES, chaired by prominent policymakers and business leaders, bring together experts who work to reach bipartisan consensus on how best to deal with complex foreign policy issues. CFR has published more than seventy Task Force reports since the program’s inception in 1995.

A recent CFR-sponsored Independent Task Force report, The Emerging Global Health Crisis: Noncommunicable Diseases in Low- and Middle-Income Countries, assesses the growing threat to developing countries and recommends a practical and scalable strategy for intervention. The Task Force finds that leadership on this emerging health crisis is vital to U.S. interests—in improved global health, in increased trade and development, and in U.S. standing in the world. Chaired by Mitchell E. Daniels Jr., Purdue University president, former Indiana governor, and former Office of Management and Budget director, and Thomas E. Donilon, distinguished fellow at CFR and former national security advisor to President Barack Obama, the Task Force was composed of a diverse and distinguished group of experts that included former government officials, scholars, and others. The project was directed by Thomas J. Bollyky, CFR senior fellow for global health, economics, and development.
The Think Tank

The David Rockefeller Studies Program—CFR’s “think tank”—comprises more than seventy full-time, part-time, and visiting scholars and practitioners, called fellows. They hail from varied backgrounds, including academia, government, the media, and the private sector, and provide analysis on the significant issues shaping today’s global agenda. Fellows monitor developments in the major regions and countries around the world and study topics such as defense policy, nuclear proliferation, terrorism, global governance, energy, trade, international economics and finance, climate change, development, global health, and cyber and digital policy.

Opposite: CFR Senior Fellows Elizabeth C. Economy and Steven A. Cook
The Studies Program hosts two research centers and a number of other programs and initiatives:

- The Maurice R. Greenberg Center for Geoeconomic Studies examines how economic and political forces interact to influence world affairs.
- The Center for Preventive Action develops strategies to prevent, mitigate, and resolve deadly conflict.
- The Civil Society, Markets, and Democracy program explores how to promote open economies and societies.
- The Digital and Cyberspace Policy program encourages exchanges between the public and private sectors to shape U.S. policy and the emerging global rules and norms of cyberspace.
- The International Institutions and Global Governance program identifies ways to improve multilateral cooperation.
- The Women and Foreign Policy program analyzes how elevating the status of women and girls globally advances U.S. foreign policy objectives.
- The Renewing America initiative examines the domestic economic underpinnings of U.S. power.

Opposite bottom: CFR Senior Vice President and Director of Studies James M. Lindsay answers questions at a congressional briefing.
Each year, CFR awards fellowships to accomplished mid-career professionals focusing on international relations. The program affords fellows the opportunity to broaden their perspective of foreign affairs and to pursue proposed research, with a placement at either CFR or another institution in New York City, Washington, DC, or abroad. Fellowship appointments are made on an annual basis. The duration and eligibility requirements vary with each fellowship.

The Fellowship Program comprises the International Affairs Fellowship (IAF), IAF in Japan, and IAF in Nuclear Security; Stanton Nuclear Security Fellowship; Military Fellowships; National Intelligence Fellowship; and Edward R. Murrow Press Fellowship.

Thanks to the generosity of donors, many of CFR’s fellows hold endowed chairs.
PUBLICATIONS include Council Special Reports, Contingency Planning Memoranda, Policy Innovation Memoranda, Discussion Papers, Workshop Reports, and other reports.

- Council Special Reports offer findings and recommendations on developing crises or emerging policy debates. Written by one or more authors in consultation with a group of independent experts, recent reports include Enhancing U.S. Support for Peace Operations in Africa and Revising U.S. Grand Strategy Toward China.

- Contingency Planning Memos from the Center for Preventive Action identify plausible scenarios that could have serious consequences for U.S. interests and propose measures to both prevent and mitigate them. Recent memos include “A China-Vietnam Military Clash,” “Strategic Risks of Ambiguity in Cyberspace,” and “Political Instability in Zimbabwe.”
Policy Innovation Memos target global problems where new, creative thinking is needed. Recent memos have proposed a Paris Club for Europe and working with India to stabilize Afghanistan.

CFR Books, which fellows write for trade and academic publishers, tackle a wide range of foreign policy and economic issues.

THE COUNCIL OF COUNCILS, an international network of twenty-six policy institutes from both established and emerging powers, facilitates candid dialogue among influential opinion leaders on issues of global governance and multilateral cooperation. Convened regionally throughout the year and annually at CFR, the group aims to find common ground on shared threats and opportunities, build support for innovative ideas, and introduce remedies into the public debate and policymaking process of member countries.
Foreign Affairs

Since its founding in 1922, Foreign Affairs magazine has been the leading forum for serious discussion of American foreign policy and global affairs. Nearly a century later, it has evolved into a multiplatform media organization with a print magazine, website, mobile site, ebooks, apps, social media feeds, a live event business, and more.

Foreign Affairs is published by the Council on Foreign Relations but is editorially independent. Its authors include U.S. and foreign officials, diplomats, and military officers; academic and think tank scholars; corporate and NGO leaders; journalists; scientists; and many other experts.

Foreign Affairs Editor Gideon Rose and Publisher Lynda Hammes unveil a new cover.
The magazine’s first issue led with a statement setting out an editorial vision that has remained constant ever since:

The articles in Foreign Affairs will deal with questions of international interest today. They will cover a broad range of subjects, not only political but historical and economic, and they will be accompanied, when it is desirable, by maps and diagrams. Technical articles will be left to more special magazines. There will be numerous foreign contributors, but the fact that the interest and profit of the American reader are a first consideration will not be forgotten. In pursuance of its ideals Foreign Affairs will not devote itself to the support of any one cause, however worthy. Like the Council on Foreign Relations from which it has sprung it will tolerate wide differences of opinion. Its articles will not represent any consensus of beliefs. What is demanded of them is that they shall be competent and well informed, representing honest opinions seriously held and convincingly expressed.

The magazine’s print edition is published bimonthly, while its website, ForeignAffairs.com, publishes fresh daily content. It also offers the magazine’s full ninety-plus years of archives, audio and video content, and curated collections of editorial material.
Informing the Public Debate

One of CFR’s principal goals is to inform the country’s foreign policy debate. The organization provides citizens with reliable information and authoritative analysis across the full spectrum of platforms for public conversation. The Global Communications and Media Relations team disseminates CFR and Foreign Affairs content through a range of activities, including holding dozens of rapid-response media calls on breaking news, organizing editorial board briefings, and curating media guides on U.S. foreign and economic policy.

CFR content and scholars are mentioned in international news outlets about twelve hundred times each month and fellows regularly appear in top media outlets such as the New York Times, Financial Times, Associated Press, Bloomberg News, CNN, National Public Radio, BBC, Al Jazeera, and the Wall Street Journal, among others.
CFR Senior Fellow Gayle Tzemach Lemmon gives a TED Talk on her best seller, Ashley’s War: The Untold Story of a Team of Women Soldiers on the Special Ops Battlefield. The video has more than 800,000 views as of September 2015.

On CFR.org, more than twenty scholars blog in real time on world events. Nearly forty experts interact with over five hundred thousand followers via their Twitter feeds. Both CFR and Foreign Affairs share content and news with their large followings on Facebook, Twitter, and YouTube.

CFR.org and ForeignAffairs.com have become required reading for those seeking background and analysis on world events, sharing content and news with a growing audience on social media. Between them, the organization reaches nearly three million followers on Twitter and Facebook. Viewers also watch over ten million minutes of CFR videos each year on the institution’s YouTube channel.

CFR.org’s editorial team has garnered four Emmy nominations and won three for the multimedia Crisis Guides, which have also received two Overseas Press Club awards.

“If you need to get up to speed like I need to get up to speed, there’s no better place to do it than CFR.org.”

—Tom Keene, Editor-at-Large, Bloomberg News
CFR’s influence extends beyond traditional foreign policy circles through its Outreach initiatives, which bring together interested citizens whose voices are increasingly important to the foreign policy debate. Programming for these constituencies includes workshops, conference call series, ebulletins, and distribution of CFR print and digital resources.

- The Academic initiative connects educators and students with CFR’s research and analysis.

- The Religion and Foreign Policy initiative provides a forum for congregational leaders, religion scholars, and policymakers from across the country to discuss issues of global significance.
  Visit www.cfr.org/religion.

- The State and Local Officials initiative provides information and analysis on international issues that affect the priorities and agendas of state and local governments.

CFR’s new Education department is launching the CFR Campus initiative, designed to help students, educators, and the interested public develop the knowledge, skills, and perspective required to be informed citizens and successful professionals in today’s interconnected world. In addition to promoting existing educational CFR content and programming—including Backgrounders, InfoGuides, and Academic Outreach events—Education is creating affordable, adaptable, and accessible resources for new audiences. The first of these original products is Model Diplomacy (available in January 2016), a free interactive classroom resource that enables students to address pressing global issues by conducting realistic simulations in which they assume the roles of U.S. foreign policy decision-makers. A dedicated education portal, CFR Campus, will house all of CFR’s educational content and programming.

For more information about Education and CFR Campus, please email cfrcampus@cfr.org.
After the difficult negotiations of the 1919 Paris Peace Conference, a group of diplomats, financiers, generals, and lawyers concluded that Americans needed to be better prepared for significant responsibilities and decision-making in world affairs.

With this in mind, they founded the Council on Foreign Relations in 1921 to “afford a continuous conference on international questions affecting the United States, by bringing together experts on statecraft, finance, industry, education, and science.”

CFR’s early members believed it was important for the institution to be both nonpartisan and noncommercial. Members were chosen for their knowledge of foreign affairs and their ability to contribute to discussions and debate. CFR carried out its mission by inviting important statesmen to speak and answer questions at meetings and by forming small groups to discuss serious issues of the day and publish their findings.

The Global Board of Advisors (GBA) consists of prominent business leaders, noted academics, and former government officials from developed and emerging-market countries. This prestigious group provides CFR with insight about their regions and offers GBA members the opportunity to join discussions on international relations and the United States’ role in the world.

CFR Funding

CFR has an annual operating budget of approximately $63.5 million and an endowment of over $370 million. The institution is funded primarily by members’ dues and donations to the Annual Fund, Corporate Program dues, special gifts from members and other individuals, grants from foundations and corporations, the endowment, and income from Foreign Affairs. CFR is nonpartisan and independent and receives no funding from the U.S. government.

Career Opportunities

CFR has approximately three hundred staff who work at either the New York headquarters, located in a historic townhouse on the Upper East Side of Manhattan, or at its Washington operation, just steps from the White House. The institution offers exceptional opportunities for individuals at all stages of their careers, from college and graduate students interested in volunteer internships to recent graduates and skilled professionals with a range of expertise looking to enter the foreign policy field. CFR also awards several fellowships each year to mid-career professionals focused on international relations.
