New CFR Books

Intimate Rivals
Japanese Domestic Politics and a Rising China
by Sheila A. Smith
Sheila A. Smith explores the policy issues testing the Japanese government as it navigates its relationship with an advancing China, finding that Japan’s interactions with China extend far beyond the negotiations between diplomats to include a broad array of social actors intent on influencing the Sino-Japanese relationship.

Order this book at www.cfr.org/intimaterivals

Market Madness
A Century of Oil Panics, Crises, and Crashes
by Blake Clayton
As oil-market turbulence persists, Blake Clayton recounts how experts continually fall prey to fears that the world’s oil is dwindling and prices are doomed to rise despite empirical proof against such predictions. Market Madness offers important lessons for Washington and Wall Street about energy policy and financial markets

Order this book at www.cfr.org/marketmadness
Oxford University Press • 248 pp. • ISBN 978-0-19999-005-4 • $27.95

New CFR Report

Political Instability in Zimbabwe
In this Contingency Planning Memorandum, George F. Ward argues that the United States should position itself to take advantage of a post-Mugabe transition by working with other countries of the southern African region to limit the risk of civil violence in Zimbabwe and to lay the groundwork for a better future.

Read this report at www.cfr.org/cpm_update_venezuela
Revising U.S. Grand Strategy Toward China

Robert D. Blackwill and Ashley J. Tellis anticipate an inevitable rivalry between Washington and Beijing for decades to come and call for “a new grand strategy toward China that centers on balancing the rise of Chinese power rather than continuing to assist its ascendancy,” a strategy that would place less emphasis on support and cooperation and more on pressure and competition.

Read this report at www.cfr.org/china_grand_strategy
CSR 72 • 54 pp. • ISBN 978-0-87609-621-5 • $10.00

Enhancing U.S. Support for Peace Operations in Africa

Paul D. Williams analyzes the strategic and financial pressures facing peacekeepers in Africa and offers clear steps that the United States should take to bolster multilateral institutions and support more efficient and effective missions.

Read this report at www.cfr.org/peace_operations
CSR 73 • 54 pp. • ISBN 978-0-87609-624-6 • $10.00

A Bipartisan Work Plan

Helping America to Work

The United States needs new policies designed to help people develop the skills they need to manage economic change with greater personal security. Matthew J. Slaughter and Robert B. Zoellick lay out a jobs-policy overhaul to support innovation and adapt to changing needs.

Read this report at www.cfr.org/work_plan_pim
New CFR Reports

Aligning U.S. and ROK Visions for East Asia
Scott A. Snyder and Woo Jung-yeop suggest that Washington should support the Seoul Process and Seoul should support the U.S. rebalance to Asia, given the two allies’ overlapping goals of promoting cooperation and strengthening respect for international norms in Asia.

Read this report at www.cfr.org/seoul_process

The Pivot in Southeast Asia
Balancing Interests and Values
Joshua Kurlantzick argues that the United States should refocus its Southeast Asia policy in two ways: prioritize the countries of peninsular Southeast Asia and restore the emphasis on democracy and human rights in the region.

Read this report at www.cfr.org/pivot_southeast_asia_paper

No Helping Hand
Federal Worker-Retraining Policy
A decade ago the United States had the lowest share of long-term unemployed workers among developed nations; today, levels are nearly as high as those in Europe, despite stronger overall U.S. economic performance. This Progress Report and Scorecard from CFR’s Renewing America initiative shows that federal employment and training programs that assist job seekers do little to help the long-term unemployed.

Read this report at www.cfr.org/nohelpinghand

Quality Control
Federal Regulation Policy
The United States is no longer the trailblazer in regulatory reform. This Progress Report and Scorecard outlines the current state of federal regulation in the United States and charts ways the U.S. regulatory management system could be improved.

Read this report at www.cfr.org/qualitycontrol
Conflict in the South China Sea
Territorial disputes in the South China Sea continue to be a source of tension between China and other countries in the region. Bonnie S. Glaser argues that the United States should help lower the risk of conflict, including the potential for dangerous military incidents involving U.S. and Chinese forces.

Read this report at www.cfr.org/cpm_update_china_sea

Political Crisis in Venezuela
Venezuela is in a state of protracted crisis. Patrick Duddy updates his 2012 Contingency Planning Memorandum to reflect the current likelihood of significant political instability in Venezuela and the options available to the United States.

Read this report at www.cfr.org/cpm_update_venezuela

Working With India to Stabilize Afghanistan
As the international troop presence in Afghanistan shrinks, the United States and India have a shared interest in a stable future for Afghanistan. Alyssa Ayres writes that the United States should encourage Indian support for Afghanistan in areas of Indian expertise: democracy, economics, and civilian security.

Read this report at www.cfr.org/india_afghanistan_memo

Promoting Norms for Cyberspace
U.S. efforts to promote its preferred norms for cyberspace—Internet openness, security, and free speech—suffered a significant setback in the summer of 2013 with the Snowden disclosures. Henry Farrell identifies three steps the United States can take to reinvigorate its norm-promotion efforts.

Read this report at www.cfr.org/norms_cyber_brief